For cities a healthy population is the key to success. They have an edge over rural areas and are able to attract investment and create jobs. However, they also have a number of disadvantages. They are often overcrowded and polluted. They are also expensive to live in. They are also often the source of many of the world's major problems. They are also often the source of many of the world's major problems. They are also often the source of many of the world's major problems.

when they are in a quiet study area in my university library. Secondly, since everyone can easily write and post information on the Internet, these online sources are not always reliable for research. Therefore, we need libraries whose staff members have the responsibility to select and provide readers with the most credible materials.

In conclusion, while I agree that there are great benefits of getting information on the Internet, I disagree with the idea that traditional libraries are no longer important.

Scientist agree that people are damaging their health by eating too much junk food. Some people think that the answer to this problem is to educate people. Others think education will not work. Discuss both views and give your opinion.

Scientific findings have clearly indicated that the excessive consumption of fast food is leading the health of people to deterioration. According to some people, this unhealthy practice can be stopped by means of education; however, some others have little faith in this solution. As the supporters of each view have their own justifications, whether education is effective remains to be seen in this essay.

On the one hand, raising the awareness of people towards the dangers of unhealthy food can certainly yield some promising outcomes. Firstly, many fast food products provide very little or no information on the nutritional content in them, deterring the consumers from knowing the amount of fat, sodium or cholesterol which they take in. By being informed of how much of these harmful substances is contained in their favourite hamburgers or chips, as well as being shown the likely consequences of over-eating these foods, consumers can be more cautious the next time they choose their food. Secondly, education at schools can help to form healthy eating habits for children and parents. For instance, schools can hold some extracurricular activities such as growing and selling

Question: As they grow older, adults often like to think back on their childhood days. Are childhood and primary school days the best times in a person's life?

Student's Essay	Scott's comments
Human life comprises of various phases and one of the phase is childhood. The primary years are one of the most enjoyed and carefree phase of a person's life. As life progresses and we move from early years to being an adult, the fond memories of childhood days are always fresh in one's mind. Children are always away from the stress associated with the life of adults. As a child, one is not required to work towards supporting a family, doing well in jobs or earning a livelihood. Life in primary years is so simple and without any complications. The best part is that you get a chance to watch your favourite TV programs and also to make new friends. I certainly miss routine going to school, finishing homework, eat and sleep which sounds so relaxing when I compare it to mine which is loaded with meetings, aggressive time lines and daily challenges of a highly competitive corporate world. Moreover children get time off from school for so many weeks in a year. Such long time-off will be a luxury when a person is in job. When I look at my daughter having a sound and carefree sleep, I do miss those golden days and wish for a mechanism to rewind my life and go back to those wonderful times.	awkward expression here - see sample Not required to support a family, do well in a job or earn a livelihood. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #1 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #1 Feedback Video Band 9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #1 Some are okay with the media publishing private details of celebrities' lives, while other people feel that this shouldn't be allowed. Those who think this can continue believe that celebrities have sought out this type of life, whereas the people who think it should be banned understand that it's bad for these famous people's mental health. I personally feel that it should stop as it distracts the average person from focusing on important news. Those who are okay with the media publishing celebrity news think that celebrities understood that their private lives would be exposed before they decided to pursue their careers. As they have willingly agreed that they are okay with this, there is no need to prevent the media publishing their stories. However, the group who would like this type of news to stop understand that it takes a tremendous toll on the mental health of these celebrities. Being constantly followed by paparazzi and having intimate details of one's life leaked to the public causes massive amounts of stress and often results in mental illness. I also believe that news like this should be stopped as it results in a lot of people neglecting to read more important news. As many are drawn to learn more about celebrities, important news stories about war and politics are often overshadowed by celebrity scandals. In conclusion, some feel that it's acceptable for the media to publish stories about celebrities' private lives because the celebrities themselves understood that this would happen. In contrast, others feel it should be stopped to prevent celebrities from suffering poor mental health. I personally agree that it should be stopped as celebrity news often takes attention away from more important issues. Sample Question #2 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #2 Feedback Video Band Sample Answer #2 These days, a lot of young people like to copy the actions of the celebrities they admire most. This is because those famous people represent the most fashionable trends for the youth, and they appear to have glamorous lives. However, I think this is a negative circumstance as it causes these young people to undervalue their own importance. One of the causes of children and teenagers copying the behaviour of famous people is that these famous people are at the forefront of modern fashion trends. This is because they hire stylists to ensure that their style is always up to date, and when young people see how good these celebrities look, they are inspired to purchase and wear similar clothing. Another reason for copying the way celebrities act is because they appear to have elegant lifestyles. When young people see this, they wish that they were also surrounded by luxurious items so feel compelled to copy the actions of the celebrities in an attempt to get closer to their way of life. I believe that young people mimicking their favourite stars is a negative situation as these they often undervalue their own importance. Because these young people are aspiring to be rich and have a large number of online followers, they feel inadequate in comparison and don't fully appreciate that they are just as important as anyone else. In conclusion, the way that many young people are copying the actions of their favourite celebrities has been brought on by the desire to be fashionable and live an elegant lifestyle. This, however, is a negative situation as it causes these young people not to fully appreciate their own importance in life. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #3 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #3 Feedback Video Sample Answer #3 All over the world, many individuals use most of their spare time at home watching television programmes. The advantages of this situation are that they save money and don't need to make plans, whereas the disadvantages are that they aren't healthy and don't feel a sense of accomplishment. The first benefit is that these people save more money than those who have other hobbies. Most hobbies involve membership or entrance fees that must be paid regularly, whereas watching television is comparatively cheaper and rarely requires any additional payments after the initial purchase of the TV set. Another key advantage is that those who primarily watch TV to pass the time don't need to make plans. Many free time activities are done with other people, and it can often be difficult and tiresome to coordinate with others. On the other hand, poor health is a disadvantage for those who spend most of their leisure time at home watching television. Compared to people who have active hobbies, those who watch TV get little exercise and when this continues over a long period, their health deteriorates. Furthermore, there is the additional drawback of gaining no sense of accomplishment from watching TV. In comparison to the individuals who enjoy the experience of completing a craft project or spending time at the gym, the people at home watching television have little or no sense of achievement. In conclusion, anyone who watches televisions as their primary means of passing the time has the advantage of saving money and not being required to make plans in advance of their free time. However, they do have the disadvantages of not being healthy, and they tend not to have any sense of accomplishment from their hobby. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #4 Feedback Video #4 Band 9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #4 Some believe team sports build children up to be ready for their careers, but others disagree. According to those who think these sports are an advantage, cooperation is an integral part of working, whereas the other group disagrees since they understand that competition results in cheating. My opinion is that team sports are beneficial because they show the value of hard work. Some individuals believe that team sports teach children how to cooperate and this helps with future careers. The only teams that succeed are those whose members work together to avoid losing. In team sports, this skill is more apparent than in any other activity that children engage in, and, as a result, those who play on a team have an advantage when working on a team later in life. Those who feel that team sports are not an advantage understand that this type of competition often leads to cheating. Compared to playing other sports, children are more likely to be encouraged to cheat by their team members due to the desire to win at all costs. As this mentality is then brought to the workplace, it only allows for short term success and inevitably leads to shame and the loss of jobs. My opinion is that team sports help children in their future careers because they learn the value of working hard. Success doesn't come easily, and children who play on a team understand that they must work hard to win. This realisation transfers directly into one's career as they know that hard work will result in success. In conclusion, some believe that team sports will lead to children being better prepared for their future careers because they learn the value of cooperation, while others disagree as they understand that competition can result in cheating. I, however, believe that these sports benefit children as they realise that hard work will lead to success. Sample Question #5 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #5 Feedback Video Band 9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #5 Some individuals think that technology from the modern era, like the internet and smartphones, is creating more issues than it is resolving. I completely agree with this statement because people's mental health is suffering, and, also, people don't enjoy their free time as much as they used to. First of all, modern technology is negatively affecting the mental health of many individuals. This is because an essential aspect of good mental health is processing what happens to us, particularly any negative experiences. However, with modern technology, many people don't take any time to reflect on their lives and instead spend all of their available time on the internet or watching television. Sample #9 Feedback Video #9 Band 9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #9 There are individuals who feel that living in a rural area is more beneficial, while others feel that the city is a better choice. The people who prefer the countryside enjoy the peaceful surroundings, whereas the others like urban areas as they are closer to work. I personally prefer the country as I enjoy having a private outdoor space. On the one hand, some individuals like the countryside best as it's more peaceful. With all the noise from traffic and construction in urban areas, it's difficult to relax. Where I live, for example, trucks on the nearby highway blow their horns all through the night, and this regularly affects my sleep. On the other hand, other individuals like city life best because the short journey to and from work is a significant advantage. As people in the countryside often spend hours commuting between their house and workplace, they lose a lot of time compared to those in the city. This means that people who live in urban areas have additional free time and get to spend it doing things they enjoy. My opinion is that life in the countryside is better as the private outdoor space is an enjoyable feature. Houses in the country tend to have space outside that belongs to the owner, but this is rare for city houses. Having this land is a massive benefit as it can be used for barbecue parties with friends and family. In conclusion, some people prefer to live in the country as they are more relaxed by the peaceful environment. In contrast, others who prefer to live in a city enjoy the benefits of having a short commute to work. However, my own opinion is that countryside life is more enjoyable because of the private outdoor space. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #9 Feedback Video Band 9 Sample Answer #9 These days, a lot of people see shopping as something to do for enjoyment instead of as a necessary task for purchased items they require. This can create the problems of people not using their time wisely or getting into debt, and one possible solution is to reduce shopping hours. Shopping as a form of entertainment is problematic as it wastes valuable time. Instead of doing something useful like learning a new skill, people who do this receive little or no benefit from their activities. For example, some younger members of my family regularly shop at our local mall but also insist that they don't have enough time for their homework. Furthermore, viewing shopping in this way can result in debt. This is especially true when these people have credit cards and choose to ignore the dangers of overspending in favour of purchasing an item that they crave. In Ireland, for instance, the vast majority of credit card debt is related to purchases of non-essential items. One possible solution is for governments to reduce the times during which shops can open. As most shops are open for 12 or more hours every day, this allows people with the mindset that shopping is a leisure activity to indulge in this behaviour. However, if shops were accessible for fewer hours each day, they would find more beneficial activities instead. In conclusion, the main problems related to people shopping to pass the time are that they don't use their time to benefit themselves, and many fall into debt. A potential solution is for governments to enforce shorter opening hours for shops to curb the number of hours during which these people can shop. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #10 Feedback Video #10 Band 9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #10 Nowadays, a lot of employees stay late at work rather than returning home to spend time with their families. This happens because these people need the extra income they can earn by working overtime, but it results in fatigue and misbehaviour in the children. Many people work extra hours because they need to earn additional money. They may have bills that they can't cover or live above their means which puts them in a situation where their basic salaries aren't enough. In my old job, for instance, the majority of my colleagues who worked late often complained that our pay wasn't high enough for them. For people who work late, the result can be extreme tiredness. As they don't have enough time to let their minds and bodies recover from the work they do each day, the outcome is that these people are exhausted beyond what is healthy. For example, studies in New Zealand showed that working fewer hours resulted in more productivity because employees had more energy and focus. Another effect of this phenomenon is that the children of those people working late start to misbehave. Because the children feel neglected and want more of their parents' time, they act out in an attempt to get as much attention as possible before the parent is gone again. In conclusion, the main cause of people staying late at work is that they don't have enough money to sustain their bills or lifestyle without the additional money. The effects this has on society are that these people are affected by fatigue, and their children's behaviour suffers as a direct consequence. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #11 Feedback Video #11 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #11 In many nations, rising numbers of young people are committing serious crimes. This is happening because many parents are too busy, and children have easy access to violent movies. To resolve this issue, governments should enforce a maximum number of hours that people can work, and websites with mature content should require their visitors to register. One of the primary reasons for more crimes being committed by young people is that parents must work longer hours. Because they don't have the time to care for their children properly, some young people use the additional freedom to explore criminal activities. Furthermore, with the advent of the internet, young people can easily access inappropriate films, and some come to admire the violent characters portrayed so imitate the behaviour they observe. The first way this can be resolved is by setting a limit to the number of hours that anyone can work. If parents spend less time at work, they will have the opportunity to closely foster their children and guide them away from any unlawful behaviour. In addition to this, websites that provide access to movies unsuitable for children should require their visitors to create accounts that confirm their age. This will ensure that children are not exposed to inappropriate content and will not be negatively affected. In conclusion, more young people are breaking the law because their parents are too busy working, and violent content can readily be accessed on websites. To overcome this, governments should set a maximum number of working hours per person, and websites with violent movies must get visitors to register and confirm their age. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #12 Feedback Video #12 Band 9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #12 Because of modern technology, more people are working from home rather than commuting to their employers' offices. Doing this has more advantages because the main benefits are saving time and money, whereas the main disadvantage is solitude. First of all, working at home saves the employee a lot of time because they don't need to travel to their office every day. Compared to those who spend several hours commuting to and from work each day, people working from home can use this time as they please. For instance, in Manila, where commuters spend up to 6 hours a day in traffic, online jobs are in demand because of the additional free time that comes with them. In addition to this, working from home saves more money. As people who work online can prepare their meals at home, they don't have to pay the high prices that restaurants charge. For example, in most office environments, lunchtime is seen as an opportunity to bond with colleagues, so there is an expectancy to eat out instead of bringing food from home. Despite the benefits mentioned above, the solitary existence of working from home is the one disadvantage. The social interaction that comes with working in an office and being surrounded by others doesn't exist for those who work from home, and it can get lonely without having others to bond with. This was seen during coronavirus lockdowns, where people's mental health suffered due to the isolation. In conclusion, there are more advantages to working from home because of the time and money saved by people who do this; however, the one drawback is that it can be a lonely lifestyle. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #13 Feedback Video #13 Band 9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #13 Nowadays, a lot of children use more of their time to play computer games than to play sport. This is because parents are scared to let their children go out unattended, and I think it's a positive development as the children are safer at home. Many children pass more of their time with video games than with sport because their parents are afraid to allow them out of the house by themselves. In the past, parents were not as informed about the dangers of the outside world, but now that this information is better communicated, parents understand that it's safer for their children to be at home. As a result, children can only play sport when they are under the supervision of another adult, so they must spend a more significant amount of time at home where they play the most popular indoor pastime: video games. I believe that this circumstance is beneficial for children as no harm will come to them when they are at home. To clarify, when children play sport together, they need to go back and forth from one another's houses and go to sports facilities, and during these times, they could come to harm at the hands of strangers. For example, in Ireland, since parents are more hesitant to let their children out alone to play sport with their friends, fewer young people visit hospitals as a result. In conclusion, as parents are concerned about the dangers their children can be exposed to when going out to play sport with their friends, the children are encouraged to stay at home to enjoy playing video games. I think this is a favourable situation as it means that children these days are safer. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #14 Feedback Video #14 Band 9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #14 Because, in general, people nowadays are older when they get married, there are some people who are concerned that this circumstance will have a negative effect on families. I completely agree with this because older people aren't as good at taking care of children, and they are more selfish than their younger counterparts. When couples wait until they're older before getting married, they are not as capable of looking after their children. This is because, as people get older, they have less stamina and don't have the energy it takes to care for and entertain a young child properly. In Ireland, for example, it is common to see younger parents run around and play with their children at the playground, but the older ones tend to sit at the sides and just watch as they don't have the energy to get involved. Furthermore, these people have grown to be more selfish during the extra years they have waited to get married. Because they have only needed to consider their own needs and desires for such a long time, they resent the concept of helping others and allowing others to make decisions for them. For instance, in America, it's more common for couples to get divorced if they wait until they are older to get married, and this is often because they can't learn to cooperate with one another. In conclusion, I firmly agree that families are experiencing a negative consequence because of the decision made by many to wait until they're older to get married. This is because they are not as capable as young parents of taking care of children and the extended time alone often makes them selfish. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #15 Band 9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #15 It is believed that parents should limit the amount of time their children spend in front of the television and encourage them to spend more time reading. I completely agree with this opinion because of the adverse effects watching television has on eyesight and the benefits that reading has on literacy. Parents shouldn't allow their children to spend too much time watching television because it harms the eyes when children do this for too long. This is because the light from a screen damages the internal tissue of the eye, especially over prolonged periods. Furthermore, this damage is long-term and cannot be undone. For example, it's more common for a child with glasses to have eye damage caused by extended periods of watching television than because of any other cause. Another reason parents should limit how much time their children can watch television in favour of reading books is that reading is fundamental to literacy development. Mastering the skill of reading requires a lot of practice, and children who don't spend enough time doing this are unlikely to improve their ability later in life. In Korea, for example, it has been discovered that many children who are unable to read at the expected level for their age spend an excessive amount of time watching television. In conclusion, I agree that children's exposure to television should be limited to encourage them to read more as it will reduce the harmful effects that too much television can have on a child's eyes and the extra time spent reading will allow them to achieve higher levels of literacy. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #16 Feedback Video #16 Band 9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #16 Some individuals choose to find accommodation in the country, although that results in longer commuting times to work every day. The advantages of this decision are that they can find cheaper housing and live in a quieter environment, whereas the drawbacks are the distance to a hospital and the time they lose while driving to and from work. One of the main benefits of living in the countryside is that the accommodation is cheaper. Compared to living in the city, renting or buying in the country is more reasonable and results in more disposable income. An additional advantage is that the environment in the countryside is quieter. Without the noise of traffic and music coming from business premises, those who live outside cities have a more peaceful existence, and this is known to have a positive impact on one's mental health. On the other hand, there is the drawback of being far from a hospital if any medical emergency happens. Although it is not a common occurrence, when there is a medical emergency, those who live in a city will get medical assistance much sooner, and this can be the difference between life and death. Another less serious disadvantage is that people in the countryside lose more time commuting to and from work than those in the city. This can amount to several hours a week and, in many cases, means that those in the countryside must forgo their hobbies due to a lack of time. In conclusion, living in the countryside is beneficial as it allows for savings on accommodation and a more peaceful environment because of the lack of noise. However, there are also the disadvantages of being further from medical facilities if there is an emergency and people who live in the countryside lose a lot of time travelling back and forth to work. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #17 Feedback Video #17 Band 9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #17 There are individuals who believe that antisocial behaviour is exacerbated by social media, whereas other people don't agree. Those who feel social media is inciting this type of behaviour see how frequently offensive comments are found online, while the others think this behaviour has always existed. I hold that it does encourage unacceptable behaviour because of the anonymity people have online. Some individuals believe that social media makes people more comfortable to behave inappropriately because abusive comments are so widespread on these platforms. Even when a thread starts off positive, it usually becomes hostile soon thereafter. For example, YouTube celebrities are encouraged not to read comment sections because hurtful remarks are inevitable. However, others feel that society has always been this way, but online comments seem more predominant because of their longevity compared to the spoken word. Before social media, if someone did something antisocial, it only upset those in the immediate vicinity. On social media platforms, though, there is a permanent record of these actions, and as a result, it seems as though they're more prevalent than ever. I personally hold that social media is to blame for an increase in antisocial behaviour because people can stay anonymous while carrying out these unacceptable acts. Without any direct repercussions, these people feel comfortable doing unethical things that they would never be brave enough to do in front of others. In conclusion, some people feel that the hurtful comments that dominate social media are evidence that these platforms are encouraging antisocial behaviour, while others think that this behaviour had existed since before this technology. I believe that social media is responsible for more antisocial behaviour because people who are generally afraid to behave inappropriately feel braver when they're anonymous. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #18 Feedback Video #18 Band 9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #18 These days, people all over the world can read many different periodicals on the internet. Some individuals feel that it won't be long until newspapers and magazines which are printed on paper disappear entirely. I completely agree with this belief because the online versions are better for the environment and more profitable. The first reason printed newspapers and magazines will cease to exist in the near future is that they have a negative effect on the environment. There is the apparent need to cut down trees to produce paper, but there is also the additional effect of the carbon dioxide created when transporting the materials and finished products to the various locations before a customer can purchase them. This is why many people choose to read newspaper and magazine articles online, and this trend will continue to grow as individuals worldwide continue to become more concerned about the environment. Furthermore, the companies that run newspapers and magazines won't profit from the printed versions of their publications for much longer. This is because the number of people purchasing them has already decreased substantially since the emergence of the online format. As this trend continues, it will only be a short amount of time before the readership is too low to attract advertisers, and once this happens, it will be financially unviable to continue printing them. For example, this has already happened to 'The Dublin Times', and it is only published online nowadays. In conclusion, printed newspapers and magazines won't exist for much longer because they are bad for the environment, and they will stop being profitable for the companies that publish them. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #19 Feedback Video #19 Band 9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #19 Because populations are growing, additional housing is required in many nations. My opinion is that it's better to build these new houses in existing cities rather than creating new towns in the countryside because more children will have access to high-quality education and the countryside will be preserved for wildlife that lives there. The first reason building extra houses in cities is preferable to constructing them in the countryside is that the children who live in them will have a better education. It is well-known that the schools in cities are far superior to their rural counterparts and by building the extra houses in cities, more children will have access to the best possible education. For example, in Vietnam, many children leave their hometowns to live with their extended families in the cities because the schools there are of a higher standard. Another motivation to construct these new houses in urban areas is to conserve the habitats of local wildlife in rural areas. The animals in these places cannot adapt to life in urban or suburban landscapes and must relocate when their homes are overrun by humans. As the amount of land available for these animals shrinks, their numbers decline because of a lack of space to flourish. For instance, when I was growing up in rural Ireland, wild animals such as foxes and rabbits were a common sight, but due to the area being more built up, these animals are a rare sight nowadays. In conclusion, we should favour building additional housing in urban rather than rural areas as it's better for children's education and leaves the habitat of local wildlife intact. IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Question #20 Feedback Video #20 Band 9 IELTS Writing Task 2 Sample Answer #20 All over the world, accidents on the road each day result in grave injuries. Consequently, some hold that more stringent laws are required to reduce the number of casualties. I completely disagree with this because people already ignore that reckless driving can result in fatalities, and previous efforts to reduce accidents with stricter laws have failed. First of all, increasing the severity of the rules governing road safety won't result in fewer injuries because the people driving recklessly are already ignoring the more severe consequence that it could kill them. People who drive dangerously are more concerned with the thrill of speeding or getting to an appointment on time than with the real dangers of driving. Because the risk of death isn't incentive enough for these people, a lesser punishment such as a fine will not have the desired effect. Furthermore, many countries have already failed to make their roads safer with stringent laws. The problem is that many dangerous drivers aren't worried about penalties because they're confident that the police won't catch them. Because they have this mentality, the punishment has no significance as they already believe that they won't face any consequences. For example, in America, a person driving under the influence are now sent to prison instead of losing their licence, as was the case in the past. However, this has not reduced the number of drunk driving cases. In conclusion, I don't believe that stricter laws will result in safer roads because dangerous drivers are already willing to ignore the more serious consequence of dying in a collision. In addition, previous attempts by countries to improve road safety with more severe punishments have failed. Let me point out the exact mistakes you're making with my free Live Feedback Lessons.
